A pilot morning at the Launch Pad

One morning. Please read this before you say yes. Nothing is signed until you have.

What this is. One morning, about four hours, with two to four young people. We will run a real piece of the Launch Pad's first year: your learner starts a map of who they are, and starts a list of a hundred dreams with no ceiling on any of them. The list is theirs to keep going afterwards if they want to, and nobody will ask to see it.

What this is not. It is not a commitment to anything. Saying yes to this morning does not enroll anyone or hold a seat. It is not therapy and I am not a therapist. It carries no credit, it is not accredited, and nothing from it goes on any record.

Who will be in the room. Me, and two other adults for the whole morning: _____ and _____. There is no aide. They are here to watch me, not your learner: whether I meet a young person's no or manage it. Either of them can stop the morning, and they have agreed in advance to do it without asking me first. This is a real session, built for your learner, and also the first time anyone has watched me run one. It is a mirror for the guide, not a test of anybody's child.

Your learner can stop at any point. Any part of it, or all of it. They can sit out, step out, say nothing, or go home. Nothing changes if they do, and nobody will ask them to explain.

If you change your mind. Any time before the morning, including the night before, text me one word: out. You do not owe me a reason and I will not ask for one. I will not bring it up again, then or later.

What we keep: nothing. No photographs. No write-up. No post, now or later. Nothing from this morning will ever be used to tell anyone about the Launch Pad. Whatever your learner writes is theirs and goes home with them. The one exception is the paragraph below: if I have to bring in help, I write down what happened, what I did and who I called, and you can read it.

If something hard comes up. Young people sometimes meet something difficult when they write about their own lives. If something comes up that is bigger than a morning can hold, I will stop and help your learner get to real help. I will tell you the same day, unless what your learner tells me is that they are not safe at home. In that case I am obliged to call _____ instead, and I will tell your learner to their face what I am about to do and why, rather than go behind them. _____ has agreed to take a same-week call if we need one. In an emergency, 988 is free and open day and night, by call or text.

The limit, said plainly. One guide, one room, four hours. If two young people need me at the same time, I will not be able to give both of them all of me. That is the honest ceiling of a morning run by one person, and it is part of why two other adults are here.

When: _____ Where: Vibrant Life Questions, any time: Erin Stanley, _____

A phone answered that morning: _____ Anything I should know? Food, medication, anything that matters in a four-hour room. _____

Please bring a lunch. We eat together in the middle of the morning, and the studio does not provide the food.

To the young person reading this. The rest of this note is written to the adult who handed it to you. This page is yours. You are invited to one morning. You can stop at any point, sit out, step out, say nothing, or leave, and nothing changes and nobody will ask you why. If you would rather not come at all, say so now and that is the end of it. One thing to know first: if you tell me something that makes me think you are not safe, I will not keep it to myself, and I will tell you who I am going to tell, and why, before I tell them. You are not signing a promise below. You are signing that somebody told you the truth about the morning.

Family: I have read this note, and my learner may take part in this one morning.
